

What Was I Thinking When I Registered for a Parent Participation Preschool?

What Was I Thinking When I Registered for a Parent Participation Preschool?

Great! My kids were just accepted into an incredible parent participation preschool program. After I received my welcome letter, I was given the handbook of parent responsibilities and expectations. I felt lost and overwhelmed when reviewing the thirty-page handbook.

Parent Participation Responsibilities

I love my children dearly and have the time to participate with them at school. I am also aware that participating family responsibilities

Orientation and parent education classes

Weekly classroom participation hours for parents

Parent work days for maintenance, cleaning, and beautification

Creating curricular units that are presented by the parents

Snack preparation and serving guidelines

Celebration expectations for holidays and birthdays

Participation in cultural celebrations and community services projects

Fundraising for the school and a scholarship fund

Responsibility for reporting illnesses and absences

Labeling children's clothing and personal care items

Guidelines for children bringing books, toys, and sharing items to school

Dress code expectations

Understanding safety procedures

Knowledge of discipline and conflict resolution procedures

Wonderful Preschool Outcomes

Although there are many responsibilities, most parents find that their participation with their preschool children is a rewarding experience. Many of us have participated in these programs with our children and now our grandchildren. Last week one of our bloggers read a newly published book about her preschooler to his class. The book reading was followed with a small group activity. The preschooler featured in the book felt like a celebrity when he carefully signed his name on a copy of the book that was donated to the school.

Parent participation programs create long-lasting commitments of engaged parents. These parents are active with their children at school. They also care for all other children and families in their community.

Happy parent participation!

Joyce

Copyright © 2017 by GenParenting