

Academic Success One Day at a Time

Academic Success One Day at a Time

Parents want academic success for their children. They know that a good education can open many doors of opportunity for them. Children, however, live in the here and now. They don't consider the long-term consequences of their decisions. How can we break down the lofty task of educating our children into doable tasks they can embrace? Here are five tips of actions that parents and children can do daily to establish good learning habits.

Five Tips

Do homework daily. Establish the habit of study by setting aside time for homework each day.

Read every day. Whether it's part of the homework assignment or not, have your child read to you, with you, or alone every day.

Allow your child to do her own homework; don't do it for her. If, after you have provided support, your child still commits errors, leave the errors. The teacher needs to see what your child is doing wrong in order to know what she still needs to teach.

Teach children to work independently. They should read the instructions for the various homework assignments by themselves, and explain to you what they need to do. Support by asking questions rather than by telling them what to do.

When your child is having problems with learning, motivate him. Along with making sure that the teacher provides support in the classroom, help your child understand that none of us is perfect. Sometimes learning is hard and takes time, but he will learn.

Form Good Study Habits

The tips listed above, if worked on daily, will become study habits. Strong study habits are formed through repetition. Even though your child is a creature of the moment, you can set the foundation for academic success one day at a time.

Please share any tips you have for creating good study habits. We would love to share them.

With love and affection,

Rosemarie

Copyright (c) 2016 by GenParenting